It was half past five. Mr Wagner looked at the clock on the wall and then he sighed impatiently. He was waiting for a taxi because he had to go to the airport. He didn't want to arrive late.

"Don't worry", said his wife, who was sitting beside him. "There is still plenty of time". Her husband was a businessman. He had to make an important business trip to America.

He was wearing his best suit and beside his big case stood the black briefcase which was a birthday present from his wife. In it were the papers which he wanted to show to his colleagues in New York.

"I will phone you, when I reach the hotel", he said. His wife smiled. "When you arrive, I shall be in bed". Mr Wagner had forgotten that his phone call from America would wake his wife in the middle of the night.

Two minutes later a yellow taxi stopped outside the house. Mr Wagner got in. "Have a good journey and good luck", called his wife, "I hope all goes well. Don't forget to send me a postcard".
