The nine cousins were staying at their grandparents' house for the summer holiday. They were very noisy so, one afternoon, grandma decided that the children should go and see a film.

Money was tight but grandma had exactly the right amount for nine children's cinema tickets. The cousins set off happily. The afternoon was hot and the younger children soon got tired of walking and demanded a drink. They passed a shop selling ice creams. The two eldest cousins looked at their money. The cost of nine ice creams was the same as the price of one cinema ticket. They decided to buy an ice cream each as it was so hot.

At the cinema, the eldest cousin bought eight tickets. They hid the smallest cousin in the middle of their group and hurried into the cinema. Taking their seats, they laughed and joked about what they had done.
