SECTION A

Read the source material and answer ALL the questions in Section A.

SOURCE

Feral children have lived away from human contact from a very young age, and have little or no experience of human care, love, acceptable social behaviour and language. Feral children are often brought up by animals, or live in the wild or in isolation, and they are unlikely to demonstrate any normal human behaviour. There have been over one hundred reported cases of feral children including the famous example of two ‘wolf-children’ – two girls captured in October 1920 near Calcutta, India. The girls were named Kamala and Amala, and were thought to be aged about eight and two. The girls had misshapen jaws, elongated teeth and eyes that shone in the dark with the peculiar blue glare of cats and dogs. They seemed to have no sense of their gender, or indeed human, identities.
