SECTION A: The Julio-Claudian Emperors, 31 BC–AD 68

Answer EITHER question 1 OR question 2
AND then question 3.

Answer EITHER question 1 OR question 2.

1* ‘The sources consistently underestimate the significance of the contribution of other individuals to the reigns of the Julio-Claudian emperors.’
How far do you agree with this view?

You must use and analyse the ancient sources you have studied as well as your own knowledge to support your answer. [30]

2* How effectively did the Julio-Claudian emperors deal with challenges to their rule?

You must use and analyse the ancient sources you have studied as well as your own knowledge to support your answer. [30]

Answer question 3.

3 Read the interpretation below.

The Roman people, ecstatic that their favourite had at last come into his own, gave themselves over to wild celebration. ...

Not that Caligula (Gaius) was naïve enough to take this mood of optimism for granted. ... His presence at Tiberius' side had given him an instinctive and pitiless understanding of the workings of power. Unlike his grimly austere predecessor, who scorned to lavish bribes on the people, Caligula was more than happy to buy popularity. ... Donatives were splashed out on the citizens of the capital, on the legions and – most generously of all – on the Praetorians. Nor was the Senate neglected. Caligula showed himself alert to its sensitivities. The serving consuls were permitted to serve out their term of office; and when the Princeps did finally lay claim to the consulship ... his choice of colleague signalled a pointed rejection of his predecessor. Claudius ... was elevated 25 simultaneously into the Senate and to the consulship. ... Caligula explicitly repudiated all the most detested features of Tiberius' reign:

the informers, the treason trials, the 30
executions. To the listening Senate, it sounded almost too good to be true.

Which perhaps it was. ... There was no one in the Senate ... who could believe any longer in the silken 35 hypocrisies that had once served to veil what Rome had become. ... Few senators had been put at ease by the new master's smooth assurances.
... No matter how convincing his 40
performance, everyone suspected that it was just that: a performance.

T. Holland, 'Dynasty: The Rise and Fall of the House of Caesar' (adapted)

How convincing do you find Holland's interpretation of Gaius' (Caligula's) actions and behaviour?

You must use your knowledge of the historical period and the ancient sources you have studied to analyse and evaluate Holland's interpretation. [20]

SECTION B: The Breakdown of the Late Republic, 88–31 BC

Answer question 4 AND then EITHER question 5 OR question 6.

Answer question 4.

4 Read the passage below.

Sulla now busied himself with slaughter, and filled the city with more murders that anyone could count or determine. Many, too, were killed as a result of private feuds. Although	5
they had nothing to do with Sulla, he gave his consent in order to gratify his supporters. At last one of the younger men, Gaius Metellus, had the courage to ask Sulla in the Senate when these evils were going to end, and how much further he would go before they might expect these things to finish.	10
‘We do not ask you,’ he said, ‘to free from punishment those who you have decided to kill, but to free from suspense those who you have decided	15

to save.’ And when Sulla answered that he did not yet know whom he would spare, Metellus said in reply, ‘Well,	20
then, let us know who you are planning to punish.’ This Sulla said he would do. Some people, however, say that it was not Metellus, but Fufidius, one of Sulla’s fawning followers, who made	25
this last speech to him. Be that as it may, Sulla at once proscribed 80 men, without communicating with any magistrate. And despite the general outrage, a day later he proscribed	30
another 220, and then on the next day, the same number again. Referring to these measures in a public speech, he said that he was proscribing those who came to mind, and those who	35
now escaped his memory, he would proscribe at a later date. He also proscribed anyone who sheltered and saved a proscribed person, making death the punishment for such acts of	40 kindness.

Plutarch, ‘Sulla’ 31

How useful is the passage for our understanding of the proscriptions of Sulla? [12]

Answer EITHER question 5 OR question 6.

5* ‘Politicians only gained success by using violence and corruption.’ How far do the sources support this view of political activity during this period?

You must use and analyse the ancient sources you have studied as well as your own knowledge to support your answer. [36]

6* How significant was the contribution of Julius Caesar to the breakdown of the Republic?

You must use and analyse the ancient sources you have studied as well as your own knowledge to support your answer. [36]
