2* In Source 3 [page 4 lines 1–3 Special Study Material] Ben Fitzpatrick states: 'Duress operates as a concession to human weakness. The defendant elects one evil, the apparent breaking of the law, when faced with a choice of two evils, the other dilemmatic choice being to suffer serious injury or death.'

Discuss, in light of the above statement, the extent to which the defence of duress by threats has been restricted by the appellate courts. [34]

3 Consider whether the defence of duress by threats is, or is not, available in each of the following situations:

(a) Alison, 35, who owes a large sum of money to Boris, robs a bank. She claims she only carried out the robbery because Boris threatened that unless she pays the money back in a week's time, he will reveal to her parents that she is secretly married to Lucy. Alison's parents have forbidden her to be involved with Lucy or else Alison will be cut out of their will. [10]

(b) Chantelle, a secondary school teacher, steals an important exam paper from the school's safe. She claims that she only carried out the theft because David, another teacher at the school, had threatened her during lunch that he would 'stab one of her pupils to death' if she did not get the exam paper for him by the end of the school day. [10]

(c) Elsie, who is pregnant, is a member of a street gang who have a reputation for carrying out criminal activities to control their area. One day, Elsie shoots dead the leader of a rival gang in another part of the city. She claims that she only carried out the killing because Frank, another member of her gang, who has several convictions for violence, threatened that he would kill her if she did not carry out the attack. [10]
