Interpretation C – An extract from a recent blog by the writer Tim Vicary.

When I was a boy, growing up in Devon, I loved reading historical novels about men like Sir Francis Drake. They were great Elizabethan heroes. Drake was the first Englishman to sail around the world, to return with untold riches and be knighted by Queen Elizabeth on the deck of his ship, the Golden Hind. These men were pioneers, adventurers, founders of the British Empire.

I'm sure today's history is taught differently to the way I learned it; and to an extent, quite right too. For Francis Drake was a pirate, licensed by the Queen to steal, burn and destroy Spanish ships and colonies in the New World. For the Spanish, he was as much of a menace as the Vikings once were to English monks, or Somali pirates are today. He sailed with his cousin John Hawkins, too, on the third of his three slaving voyages.

Answer either question 8 or question 9.

8* In her book Elizabeth I and Religion 1558–1603, published in 1993, historian Susan Doran argued that 'the danger from English Catholics was exaggerated'. How far do you agree with this view of the nature and extent of the Catholic threat in England between 1580 and 1603? [20]

9* According to the website www.enotes.com, 'it was a good time to be English during the Elizabethan era'. How far do you agree with this view of people's daily lives between 1580 and 1603? [20]
