Brexit campaign chief must be hauled before Commons: MPs

- Anger grows over Cummings no-show
- Key Leave leaders 'not held to account'

Toby Helm
& Carole Cadwalladr

A cross-party group of MPs today demands new powers that would force witnesses to give evidence before parliament or face possible imprisonment, as anger grows over the refusal of the former Vote Leave director, Dominic Cummings, to answer claims that the organisation that helped to deliver Brexit broke electoral law.

Focus, pages 36-38

Pressure for parliament to be able to force attendance is coming from senior parliamentarians, including the chair of several powerful select committees. A parliamentary report from the all-party digital, culture, media and sport (DCMS) committee is also expected to call for parliament to have the ability to demand attendance, backed by the threat of sanctions, this week.

Anger at Cummings's refusal to come before MPs has intensified since Vote Leave was fined £61,000 and referred to the police after the Electoral Commission found last week that it had broken electoral law. The watchdog ruled it had exceeded its £7m spending limit by funneling £675,315 through the pro-Brexit youth group BeLeave – details of which were revealed in the Observer.

The founder of BeLeave, Darren Grimes, was fined £20,000 and referred to the police, along with Vote Leave official David Halsall. Cummings, who escaped censure, had previously been asked by the DCMS committee to give evidence over claims of rule-breaking but refused, accusing MPs and the Electoral

Number of NHS beds for mental health patients slumps by 30%

Toby Helm
& Denis Campbell

The number of hospital beds for people with acute mental health conditions, where a consultant psychiatrist is on hand to oversee treatment, has fallen by almost 30% since 2009 despite repeated claims by ministers that improving care for the mentally ill is now a top priority.

New official figures show that the number of beds for those with some of the most serious conditions – including psychosis, serious depression leading to suicidal feelings and eating disorders – has fallen from 26,448 in 2009 to 18,082 in the first quarter of this year.

Over the same nine years, the data also show significant falls in the number of mental health nurses working in the NHS – from 46,155 to 39,358 – and in the number of doctors in specialist psychiatry training, from 3,187 in 2009 to 2,588 in the first quarter of this year.

Last night, the MP Dr Dan Poulter, a former Tory health minister who is now practising part-time as an NHS doctor in mental health services, said it was clear that government rhetoric about giving mental health "parity of esteem" with physical health was not matched by action.

Poulter, who obtained the new data through parliamentary answers, said that mental health was still a "Cinderella service", with child and adolescent mental health lagging the

'Mamma Mia' was a popular film musical. 'Brexit' is Britain leaving the European Union. The 'Commons' is the House of Commons made up of 'MPs' – Members of Parliament. The caption below the photograph reads 'Whistleblower Shahmir Sanni, who exposed the overspending by the Vote Leave campaign, says he has lost almost everything through speaking out.' Shahmir was born in Pakistan.
