Source B

The professional footballer goes without lunch, uses a public service bus to get to the game, and has to buy a cheap pie on the way home for his tea. The rest of the week he works down a mine or in a factory, because his wages for playing football are so small. He plays because he loves the game, but he loses out by playing.

[R.W. Harrison, captain of Cockfield Football Club, writing in the Northern Echo, 1921. He was a working-class professional footballer]

Source C

Today's current crop of millionaire professionals are overpaid, selfish, and a pretty heartless bunch. They do nothing with their time off other than playing PlayStation. They only care about winning, or their next tattoo.

[Cameron Treloar, a sports journalist, writing on a sports website, 2013]

- (c) Why do Sources B and C have different views about professional sports people in the twentieth and twenty-first centuries? [8]
